
Notes on Contributors

Eilidh Garrett is an Affiliated Researcher at the Cambridge Group for the History of Population and Social Structure. She is a historical demographer working on the demography of nineteenth and early twentieth century Britain, on which subject she has published numerous articles. She is a former member of the Editorial Board of this journal.

Alysa Levene is Reader in History in the School of History, Philosophy and Culture at Oxford Brookes University. Her research focuses on the history of child welfare and the family in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, and she has published on the history of illegitimacy, child health and childhood more generally. She is a former member of the Editorial Board of this journal.

Colin G. Pooley is Emeritus Professor of Social and Historical Geography in the Environment Centre, Lancaster University, United Kingdom. He has published widely on the history of migration, mobility and transport in Britain. He is the current Chair of the Local Population Studies Society.

Alice Reid is University Senior Lecturer in Geography at the University of Cambridge and works with the Cambridge Group for the History of Population and Social Structure. She is a historical demographer, working on fertility, mortality and health in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, and has published many articles on these topics. For the past three years she has been Principal Investigator on the Atlas of Fertility Decline in England and Wales project.

Osamu Saito is Professor Emeritus at Hitotsubashi University in Japan and a visiting professor at the Cambridge Group for the History of Population and Social Structure. He is an economic and population historian. His main research field is Japan, c. 1700–1940, but he has interests in comparative studies with Europe and other parts of Asia.

Richard Smith is Emeritus Professor of Historical Geography and Demography at the University of Cambridge. He is a historical demographer and historical population geographer, working on the history of marriage patterns in medieval and early modern Europe, the long-term development of mortality patterns in England and Europe and the impact of welfare practices on demographic and economic behaviour. He is a former Director of the Cambridge Group for the History of Population and Social Structure.

Notes on Contributors

E.A. Wrigley is co-founder, with Peter Laslett, of the Cambridge Group for the History of Population and Social Structure, and Emeritus Professor at the University of Cambridge. His interests lie in the economic and demographic history of England in the period between the reigns of Elizabeth and Victoria. He is currently working, jointly with Leigh Shaw-Taylor, on the reconstruction of the history of the changing occupational structure of England in the period during the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries.