
Notes on Contributors

Lyn Boothman is an affiliated researcher with the Cambridge Group for the History of Population and Social Structure. She has been investigating the local and demographic history of Long Melford for many years and after her retirement she completed a University of Cambridge PhD supervised by Richard Smith. She is continuing her Melford researches and working in a voluntary capacity with several of the research projects underway in the Cambridge Group.

Ken Cozens holds an MA in Maritime History and is a researcher of eighteenth century London merchant networks and co-author of Wapping 1600–1800: a Social History of an Early Modern London Maritime Suburb, (London, 2009); and London's Sailortown 1600–1800: a Social History of Shadwell and Ratcliff, an Early Modern London Riverside Suburb (London, 2014). He is an Associate member of the University of Portsmouth, Port Towns and Urban Cultures Project and the Greenwich Maritime Centre; he also contributes to history publications.

Derek Morris MSc, FGS, is a graduate of Queen Mary College, University of London. He has conducted extensive research on eighteenth-century Stepney and written numerous articles together with four books on the social history of the area, the latest London's Sailortown 1600–1800: a Social History of Shadwell and Ratcliff, an Early Modern London Riverside Suburb (London, 2014). He is an Associate member of the University of Portsmouth, Port Towns and Urban Cultures Project.

Bethany Rowley is a PhD student and a member of the 'Men, Women and Care' research team at the University of Leeds. Her research examines religious charity and the experience of disabled ex-servicemen in inter-war Britain. Her recent Masters dissertation examined differing hospital treatments for shell-shocked soldiers based on class.