

---

List of contributors

Dilece Connor was an MSc student on the MSc in Social Statistics at the University of Southampton, and the paper in this volume of LPS jointly authored with Andrew Hinde draws on her MSc dissertation.

Marion Hardy is a retired geography teacher, and is now a part-time M.Phil. student at the University of Exeter studying 'people on the move' in Devon, c.1600–1800. In 1991, a Goldsmiths' Company travel award led to an interest in the county's Newfoundland connections and an M.A. by Independent Supervised Study in English Local History at the University of Leicester.

Andrew Hinde is Head of the Division of Social Statistics and Demography at the University of Southampton, where he also teaches historical demography and demographic methods. He is the author of England's population: a history since the Domesday Survey (London, 2003).

Sara Horrell is a University Senior Lecturer in the Faculty of Economics, University of Cambridge and Fellow in Economics at Murray Edwards College. Her research focuses on the economics of the household in both contemporary developing economies and historical contexts, she is currently investigating household nutrition and expenditure and the intra-household allocation of resources in nineteenth-century Britain.

Christine Jones completed her University of Essex PhD, a study of never-married people in nineteenth-century England and Wales, in 2004. Since then she has served in various research capacities attached to the UK Data Archive at Essex, and currently supports the Integrated Census Microdata project [I-CeM]. She is also an LPS Board member.

Ross McDermott recently graduated from Newcastle University with an MA in the History of Medicine. He is currently in his final year of studying medicine, also at Newcastle University.

Deborah Oxley is a University Lecturer in Social History at the University of Oxford, and Fellow of All Souls College. Deborah works on anthropometric indicators of wellbeing in the United Kingdom and Ireland, coerced labour in colonial Australia, and the historical development of criminal justice.