
Notes on Contributors

Nikki Balnave is Senior Lecturer in Public Sector and Not-for-Profit Employment and Management, Department of Marketing and Management, Macquarie University, North Ryde, Australia.

H. M. Boot is Associate Professor, adjunct, in the School of Demography, Research School of Social Sciences, at the Australian National University. Before joining the School of Social Sciences he was Head of Department of Economic History in the Faculty of Economics at the ANU.

Brian Croke is Executive Director of the Catholic Education Commission New South Wales.

Keith Geary has spent a decade in the Continuing Education Department at Oxford University, where he is a member of St Catherine's College. From 2007 to 2011, he lived in Bidford-on-Avon during which time he researched the changing population of the village in the nineteenth century. He has recently been awarded a doctorate for his work on religious diversity in mid-nineteenth century Warwickshire.

Tom Heritage is a PhD student at the University of Southampton investigating the older-age population of England and Wales between 1851 and 1911. His article for LPS 98 is based on his Master of Arts by Research dissertation on household composition and family structure in mid Victorian Hertfordshire, completed at the University of Hertfordshire in 2014

Rosemary Leadbeater is an Associate Lecturer at Oxford Brookes University where she teaches social history in relation to industrial change and the history of medicine and health. In 2016 she completed her PhD thesis: 'Experiencing Smallpox in Eighteenth-Century England', on which the article in this issue is based. Her future plans are to pursue and published other lines of enquiry prompted by her research.

Nick Parr is Associate Professor in the Department of Marketing and Management at Macquarie University, North Ryde, Australia.

Crichton Smith is at the Catholic Education Commission New South Wales. He studied for his PhD in demography at Macquarie University, North Ryde, Australia.

Lucy Taksa is Associate Dean, Research, in the Faculty of Business and Economics at Macquarie University, North Ryde, Australia.